Dmytro Nikolaienko is a Ukrainian music producer and publisher currently based in Tallinn. His sound is informed by tape and cassette looping techniques as well as 'fourth world' and avant-garde electronic composition. Nikolaienko is a founder of labels Muscut and Shukai. The first is notable for wide range of contemporary Ukrainian music from folk and dub to experimental club and psychedelic rock.

Shukai is dedicated to releasing hidden gems of XX century Ukrainian music such as pioneering electronic and jazz composers as well as original score legacy.

Valentina Goncharova is a classically trained violinist, street musician, new age experimentalist, chamber ensemble and avant-garde performer. Her career spans nearly five decades beginning in Kyiv music school to Leningrad conservatory to London session recordings to Estonian period reinventing of her composing method. In the centre of her performances and recordings are custom-built electric violin and viola with slight electronic interventions.

Katarina Gryvul (b. Lviv) works as a composer and sound artist now based in Graz. While her earlier work had elements of deconstructed pop, Katarina's recent material features an exploration of complex acoustic textures and their interaction with digital sound samples. Katarina's work is best described as classical composition with sound art sensibilities, as it moves the listener forward into unknown territories with each performance.
